

I ask you to consider keeping the ban on cell phone use while planes are in flight. It is becoming harder and harder for passengers to enjoy air travel these days. As a cell phone user myself, I am acutely aware that people using these phones are unable to lower their voice while speaking. It becomes impossible not to overhear conversations or for surrounding passengers to concentrate on reading or sleep in peace. If I were traveling and talking out loud to myself someone would ask me to be quiet and stop bothering people. All I ask is that you consider the many other people around cell phone users that are unable to escape their intrusive behavior.

Sincerely,

Robert N.
